

CENSORSHIP OF FRANCE WOULD REGULATE PRESS

Le Temps Declares That Establishment Attributes to Itself Rights and Privileges of King.

INTERFERES WITH ALL NEWS
Articles of Political Nature, Parliamentary Information and Even Trifling Local Events Do Not Escape Rigor of Guardians.

PARIS, October 29.—Le Temps, the most powerful political paper, prints on the front page a chapter on the censorship, entitled "The Censor and the Law." It says: "There are institutions which improve with custom. Such is not the case of the censorship. This establishment, born of the meeting of our democratic regime with the war, attributes to itself the rights and prerogatives of a King. The law of August 5, 1914, prohibits all information or articles concerning military or diplomatic operations of a nature favoring the enemy and exercising an unfavorable influence on the spirit of the army and the people."

As long as the censor observes these limited prescriptions it remains, as the law provides, the collaborator of the press in a common effort for the national defense. But it aspires to extend its preventive jurisdiction over everything in the newspapers. Articles of a political nature, parliamentary information or even trifling local events do not escape its suspicious rigor. It watches not only the frontier, but the capital, which does not need the censor to defend it.

CENSOR, IN FACT, IS PLACED ABOVE LAW

"Three times this week its sword fell on our columns." (Here follows a blank space, the censor having suppressed a paragraph of the editor's comment.) "Finally M. Peytral, president of the Finance Committee of the Senate, introduced a proposition providing for a reduction in the number of ministers. We were not allowed to mention it. The publication first prohibited was, it is true, authorized twenty-four hours later, but we were not permitted to recall the priority. Why does the censor thus throw on its unfortunate victim the responsibility for a delay for which it is itself culpable? But especially where does the censor get the idea that its role is to arrogate to itself the right to suppress the announcement of a parliamentary initiative?"

"Is the censor above the law or is M. Peytral an unpatriotic Frenchman between the lines of whose proposition are concealed the germs of discord? That is what we have been unable to see and what the long-eyed censor soon ceased to see. This incident proves that if the government does not exercise over the censorship a legitimate surveillance the former will settle the question in the official journal itself, as in the end this paper must receive M. Peytral's text."

"The truth is that the censor in fact is placed above the law. The law of August 5, 1914, does not abrogate that of July 23, 1881, instituting the liberty of the press. The law granting liberty of the press has the importance of an organic law. The French people gained it by a revolution. Having been sovereign, they have the right to know facts and the actions of men to whom they have delegated their powers. Who will inform the people if not the press? Moreover, in our republic, Parliament is charged with controlling the government, but the people are still the sovereign, that is to say, they must control the legislators. How will this natural prerogative be exercised if the newspapers no longer have the possibility of discussing the ideas of the governors and to appreciate their initiatives?"

"May this be a warning. It does not concern solely the rights of the press and those of the nation; the future even of liberty in France, the destinies of republican institutions are at stake, for the day when the country becomes accustomed to an arbitrary regime a redoubtable habit will be formed with consequent lowering of morals. The yokes will continue and will be alike. To bend with docility under some is to unconsciously prepare for others."

"It is regrettable to have to recall these elementary truths after forty-five years of republicanism. Nevertheless we will recall them until we have been heard."

QUIT MEAT WHEN BACK HURTS OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Says Uric Acid in meat clogs Kidneys and Irritates Bladder.

A glass of Salts is harmless way to flush kidneys, says authority.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid, which clogs the kidneys, and that the kidneys, in their efforts to purify the blood, then become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back, sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sour, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The uric acids clog the channels of the kidneys, forcing you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush out the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.
